JACK KIRBY (1917 - 1994)

Continuing our month-long tribute to comics legend Jack Kirby, one of the founding fathers of the Marvel Universe, who passed away this past February ...

John Romita: Over fifty years ago, Jack's CAPTAIN AMERICA #1 triggered my feelings toward comic art. Later, as a 24-year old, I tried to recapture Jack's Cap and fell far short. It was an experience which began years of following the trails he blazed. Before Jack Kirby hit his stride, artists approached comics with "How little can I bring to this work and still make a few bucks?" Jack taught us how much you can bring to comics while still taking away great gratification.

Joe Simon: Jack brought a new style of art to the business. Early on in the business, artists were trying to be illustrators. Jack took comics and made 'em into comics, with his action and perspective. It was great working with Kirby. We had a lot of fun — we were like kids. We would get so excited about our stories, we would jump up and down. Jack and I were very close ... we had some disagreements, but never arguments.

Will Eisner: We owe to Jack Kirby the image that we have of the super hero. He really breathed an eternal life into super heroes.

Dick Ayers: I'll sure miss Jack. The month before he died, I was working with him, so we were on the phone a lot. We did five re-creations of covers to Marvel Comics from the 1960s together, and I did another seven on my own. All of these will be auctioned off at Sotheby's on June 16th. I first started working with Jack in 1958. We worked on everything — the Sky-masters daily strip, the FANTASTIC FOUR, HULK ... it was exciting, especially the monster stuff. I always got a big charge when I opened a package (of Jack's art) and saw what it was. We did Fin Fang Foom together! The first story I inked over Kirby was a monster called Spoor!

Dan Adkins: Jack Kirby was the most innovative artist there was, the most creative. How he could turn out all that work, I'll never know!

Jim Salicrup: Working with Jack's characters at Marvel was a blast! I recently had the opportunity to work with the man himself, and it was an incredible experience I'll always cherish. I can never thank Jack enough or miss him more than I do now.

Russ Heath: Jack was one of the greatest in the business and a personal friend. He'll be much missed.

Mort Todd: As editor of MONSTER MENACE, which heralded Kirby's giant monster creations from the pre-Marvel Age era, I was proud to work with him on his foreword to MONSTER MENACE #2, which turned out to be his last work for Marvel. He contributed to Marvel right up to the end.

George Roussos: I started working with Jack back in 1940 when he first created Captain America. Over the years, I inked just about all the Marvel super heroes over Jack — the Fantastic Four, Hulk, the Avengers. He was a giant. He was a legend, and he'll be greatly missed. There won't be another one like him for a long time to come.
